Reasons and Persons
A Sample Dual-Screen Deck

Open by thanking the department. Mention that the deck was compiled with `show notes on second screen=right`, which is exactly the shape RRShow is built to split.

What the Audience Sees

- The left half of every page is the slide.
- It goes to the projector, full bleed.
- Nothing on this half is private.

The diagram consists of a large light gray rectangle on the left and a smaller white rectangle on the right. The white rectangle is positioned to the right of the gray one, with its left edge overlapping the gray one. The white rectangle has a thin blue border. Inside the white rectangle, there is a list of three bullet points.

This is the notes half. It should never reach the external display.

- Check that the crop is exact — no sliver of notes bleeding into the slide.
- Check that the aspect ratio stays 16:9 after cropping.

Three Arguments

- 1 The appeal to parsimony
- 2 The appeal to explanatory scope
- 3 The appeal to intuition

Key claim

Personal identity is not what matters in survival.

└ Three Arguments

Spend the most time on the third argument. Expect pushback on the intuition pump; have the teletransporter case ready.
Timing: aim to be here at the twenty minute mark.

Three Arguments

- ◆ The appeal to parsimony
- ◆ The appeal to explanatory scope
- ◆ The appeal to intuition

Key claim

Personal identity is not what matters in survival.

A Frame With No Note

Some frames simply have no note attached. The notes half of the page is then blank, and RRShow should render an empty pane rather than failing.

- Reductionism is defensible.
- The practical upshot is considerable.

Close on the practical upshot. Take questions.
Remember to press B to black the screen during discussion.
